—Inspectors will be sent out within the next few months to make an examination of all county roads on rural free delivery routes and if any are found in bad condition routes will be discontinued. This order has been issued from the post office department at Washington. Overseers of roads should get busy and see that all roads under their jurisdiction have the proper care. Also it would not be a bad idea for residents along the route of rural free delivery to keep tabs on the roads in their neighborhood and call the attention of authorities to the situation. It may help keep up repairs and guard against losing the service of the free delivery at your door.—Ex.

—Alliance Review:—Wheat cutting is in full blast in this section and the crop is unusually fine, the heads being large and well filled. The wheat has not been injured by storm and stands up well. Some farmers are showing samples of straw five feet long after being cut by the reaper. The weather is fine for the curing and if wet weather does not follow soon the crop will be garnered in fine condition and will be a bumper crop. Usually it requires about three pounds of straw to bind an acre of average wheat. This year it takes from 3½ to 4½ pounds for binding an acre. This indicates a heavy yield of straw. With good weather the wheat will all be in shock before the close of the week in this section.

COLLEGE HEAD HITS BACK HARD

Wooster, July 24.—Dr. J. Campbell White, president of Wooster college, struck back at his critics, in a statement today in defense of his administration.

During the meeting of the college board of trustees at commencement in June a report of a committee of inquiry of the American University Professors' Association, a national organization, was submitted, and simultaneously was published widely over the state, copies of the report being given out in Cleveland.

The report, which followed an investigation lasting several months, criticized the administration of President White and particularly was aimed against the method of the discharge of Miss Winona Hughes, dean of women, who was "fired" by President White more than a year ago.

"Temperament" was given as the reason for her discharge. Later the trustees gave Miss Hughes a formal hearing and upheld the president, but cautioned that future cases should be considered before a committee of the faculty.

Dr. White, in his statement, charges that the investigation committee denied the college the same "trial by jury" that the association insists upon for "the humblest individual professor in America."

He declares that while a committee of five was named to investigate conditions here, only one of the five, Professor H. Austen Alken, of Western Reserve college, ever came to Wooster in connection with the inquiry.

"The college objects most strenuously with being condemned without a hearing," Dr. White stated. "No formal charges against the college have ever been preferred, and they have been asked for repeatedly by myself. The chairman of the inquiry was not even willing to say who made the charges."

"The charge which, like malaria, is made to permeate the report, that the president of the college is lacking in honesty and given to duplicity is not one to be answered merely by denial. The board of trustees and the synd of Ohio will make a most thorough investigation of this matter. We ask the friends of the college to suspend judgment until such investigation and report can be made."

While the Alken report was centered upon the Hughes case, other matters were taken up. The committee found "that the methods of present administration have not been such as to appeal to the loyalty of a conscientious and self-respecting faculty and not the methods which gain for a college the confidence of the academic world." The investigators also charged that the "situation at Wooster is serious in the extreme, involving not only question of academic freedom, but the more serious question of general academic ideals."

Dr. White, in commenting upon a criticism of the report by Professor W. Z. Bennett, of the "Niles," says: "Others were impressed with his (Alken's) manifest prejudice."

UPON ITS MERITS

Senate leaders, it seems, have come to their senses at last upon the question of national prohibition.

They have decided to put making the last a football, or a hamper adjunct to some other measure. Instead, they now propose to fight it out upon its merits.

National prohibition by federal constitutional amendment has been an issue before successive congresses. The house has passed it. Senate leaders have successfully maneuvered to prevent a vote.

In order to become effective as a part of the constitution an amendment must receive a two-thirds majority in each branch of congress and then be ratified by three-quarters of the state legislatures. The necessary majority in the house is assured. Senate drys claim confidence there. The real fight for and against national prohibition will come in the legislatures.

Prohibition ought to be settled upon its merits as a distinct question of public policy. It never belonged in the discussion of the food control bill. However righteous may have been the motives of senators and representatives who insisted that complete suppression of the liquor traffic should be put through congress under the cloak of a war conservation measure, the attempt was merely detrimental to food control without bringing any material assistance to the dry cause. Whatever degree of liquor curtailment is desirable as a measure for increasing America's war efficiency may properly be made a part of the food bill; but to attempt to establish a permanent national policy under such a guise is fraught with peril for all concerned.

Let congress vote upon national prohibition as an issue separate and apart from all other issues. And if congress approves the measure, let the state legislatures approach the question in exactly the same attitude of mind. There are but two sides to prohibition—the wet and side and the dry side; and the issue is settled in the last analysis by count of noses.

There has been too much playing horse with prohibition in congress. It is an encouraging circumstance that senate wet leaders have now decided to abandon their efforts to prevent a decisive vote on the question.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE WORLD'S GREAT PEACE.

I saw the navies of the world's great fleet at sea within sheltered bay; In peace and quiet side by side they lay. For all the battle flags at last were furled.

The angry cannon stood, all still and grim. Like dogs in leash straining to find a foe; Yet all the ports were closed, and to and fro The ships swayed lightly on the ocean's rim.

Never again their thunder should declare Ruin and death for helpless shore and land; They kept the peace of seas from strand to strand.

And bandit cruisers feared to leave their lair. Allied in peace, each nation claimed their aid. Only against the enemies of all; No guardian fortress from their fire should fall.

And only crime hid from them, sore afraid. Alas! The dawning, with its golden gleam, Awoke me to a world where wars increase; The keepers of allied world's great peace Passed with my dream—ah, was it but a dream?
